The URL in the address bar is <https://nypost.com/2019/12/14/brooklyn-man-says-his-low-tech-invention-thwarts-package-pirates/>. The page features the New York Post masthead and a navigation bar with 'SECTIONS', a search icon, and a mail icon. Below the masthead, there is a 'RECOMMENDED' section with several article thumbnails and headlines, including 'PhD student accused of killing her friend's newborn baby could...', 'NY anesthesiologist with 'chloroform fetish' convicted of druggin...', 'Man accused of decapitating parents belts out 'What's Lov...', 'NJ woman sexually assaulted mid-air by stranger on American...', and 'Gunman kills mourner at friend's grave after victim threatens to pu...'. The main article is titled 'Bed Stuy inventor Bob James, aka "Uncle Bob", next to his anti-package theft creation, called the "Bob box", outside his home.' and is accompanied by a photo of Bob James, a man with a beard wearing a green jacket and a blue beanie, holding a cardboard box. The photo is decorated with red and white striped bows and a sign that reads 'Place All Deliveries Here For a BobBox Call 718-785-0700'. To the right of the main article is an advertisement for AT&T, promoting the Motorola Razr+ for $5.99/month with no trade-in required. Below the advertisement is a 'TRENDING NOW' section with a link to 'ON NYPOST.COM' and a small image of a person's face with a red '121,619' view count.

admiring the decorated demo that sits outside his three-family brownstone.

There are no bells and whistles. The container looks like a cross between a podium, wood chipper and arcade game.

"I don't promote these as a fine piece of furniture. They are functional. Like a garbage can." James says.

Passerby Winfield Harrell looks into the "Bob box."

The primitive poacher-proof box stands about 6-feet high, weighs about 125 pounds and can be chained to a fence.

Some of the negative feedback is that the box is an eyesore, and it is too expensive.

James defends the $199 price tag, explaining that each Bob Box costs him $85-$90 in materials (from Home Depot or Lowe's) and construction takes him a day and a half.

The box is made out of plywood and pressure-treated lumber for the legs. James uses acrylic latex paint.
